Since it must be, O God, since it must be, This black abomination that has come To rock the world with red delirium, This menace that has spread from sea to sea,-Let it come thus-clean, wonderful and free, A sudden baptism in the lonely deep, A swift departing, like a great star's leap Down the blue darkness to Eternity.

Not in foul trenches where the ravens cry, Let Death meet men, but on the open foam. Like meteors let their spirits flash back home, Proud and unscathed, white fires that cross the sky. Let them go forth, kissed by the quiet sea, Since it must be, O God, since it must be!
